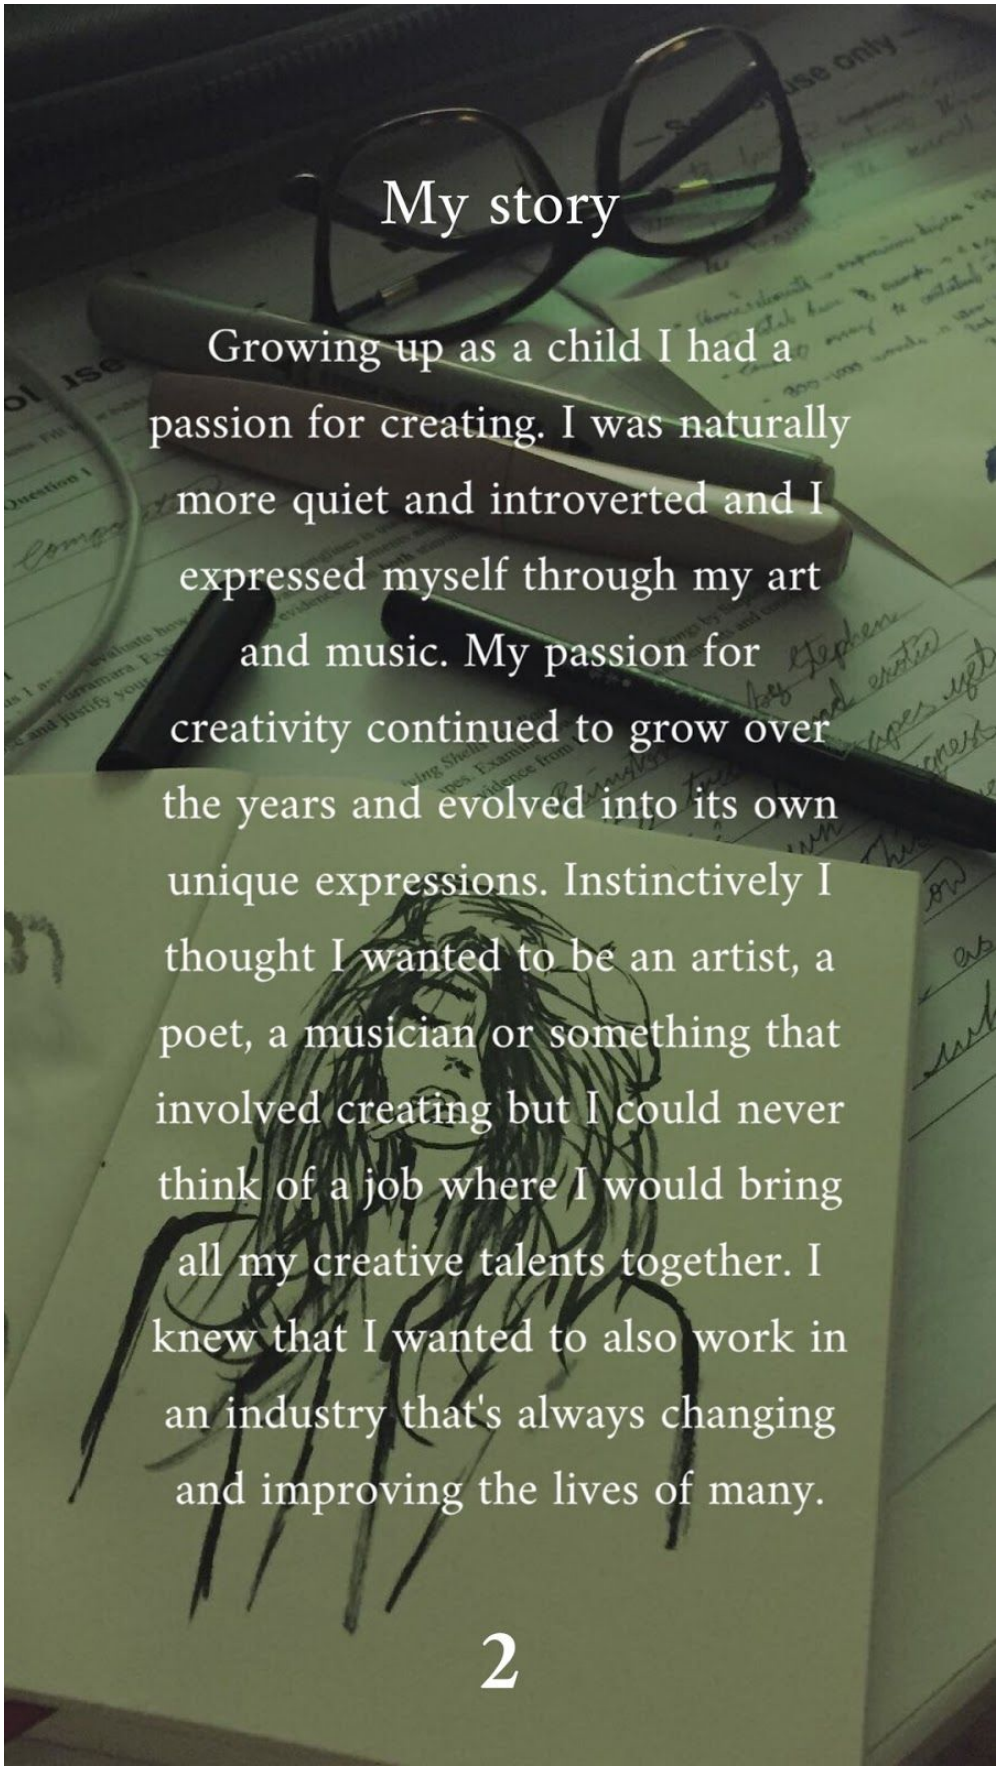
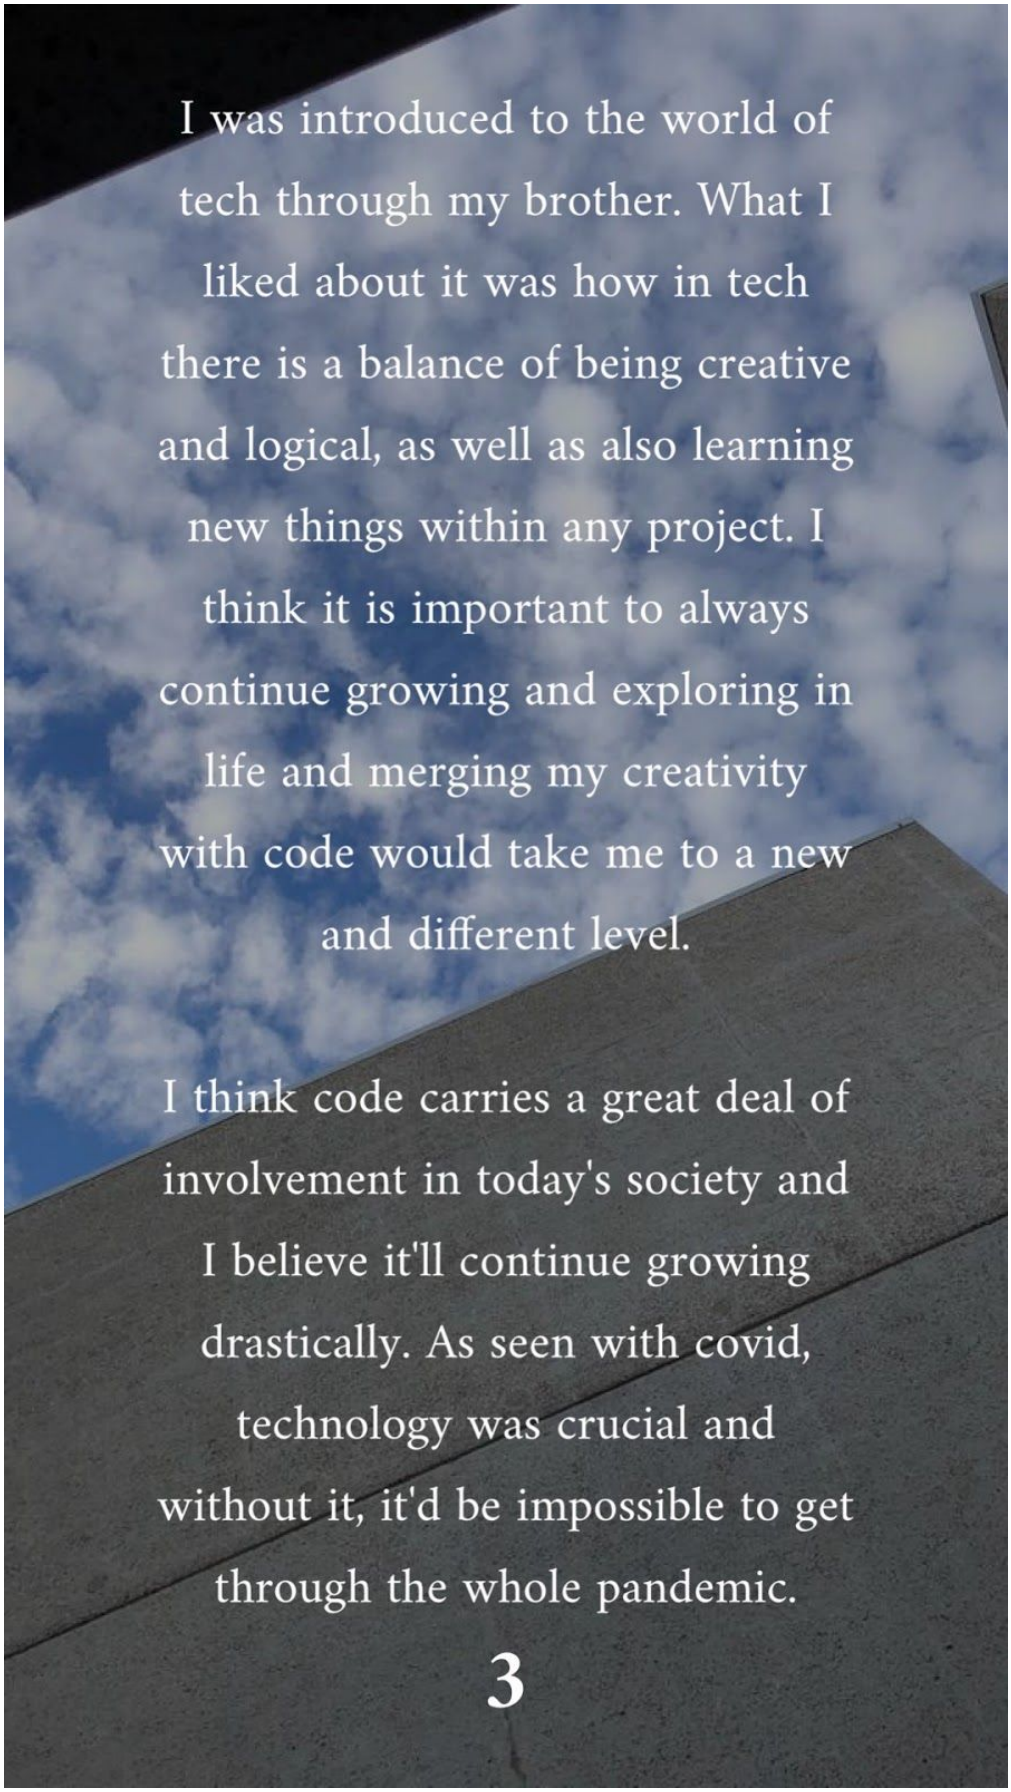
A bit about myself..

My name is Natalia and I was born in Brazil and raised in Australia since I was four. My parents are Ukrainian and Bolivian, so at home I speak Spanish mainly with a mix of Portuguese and Russian which is fun and confusing sometimes.



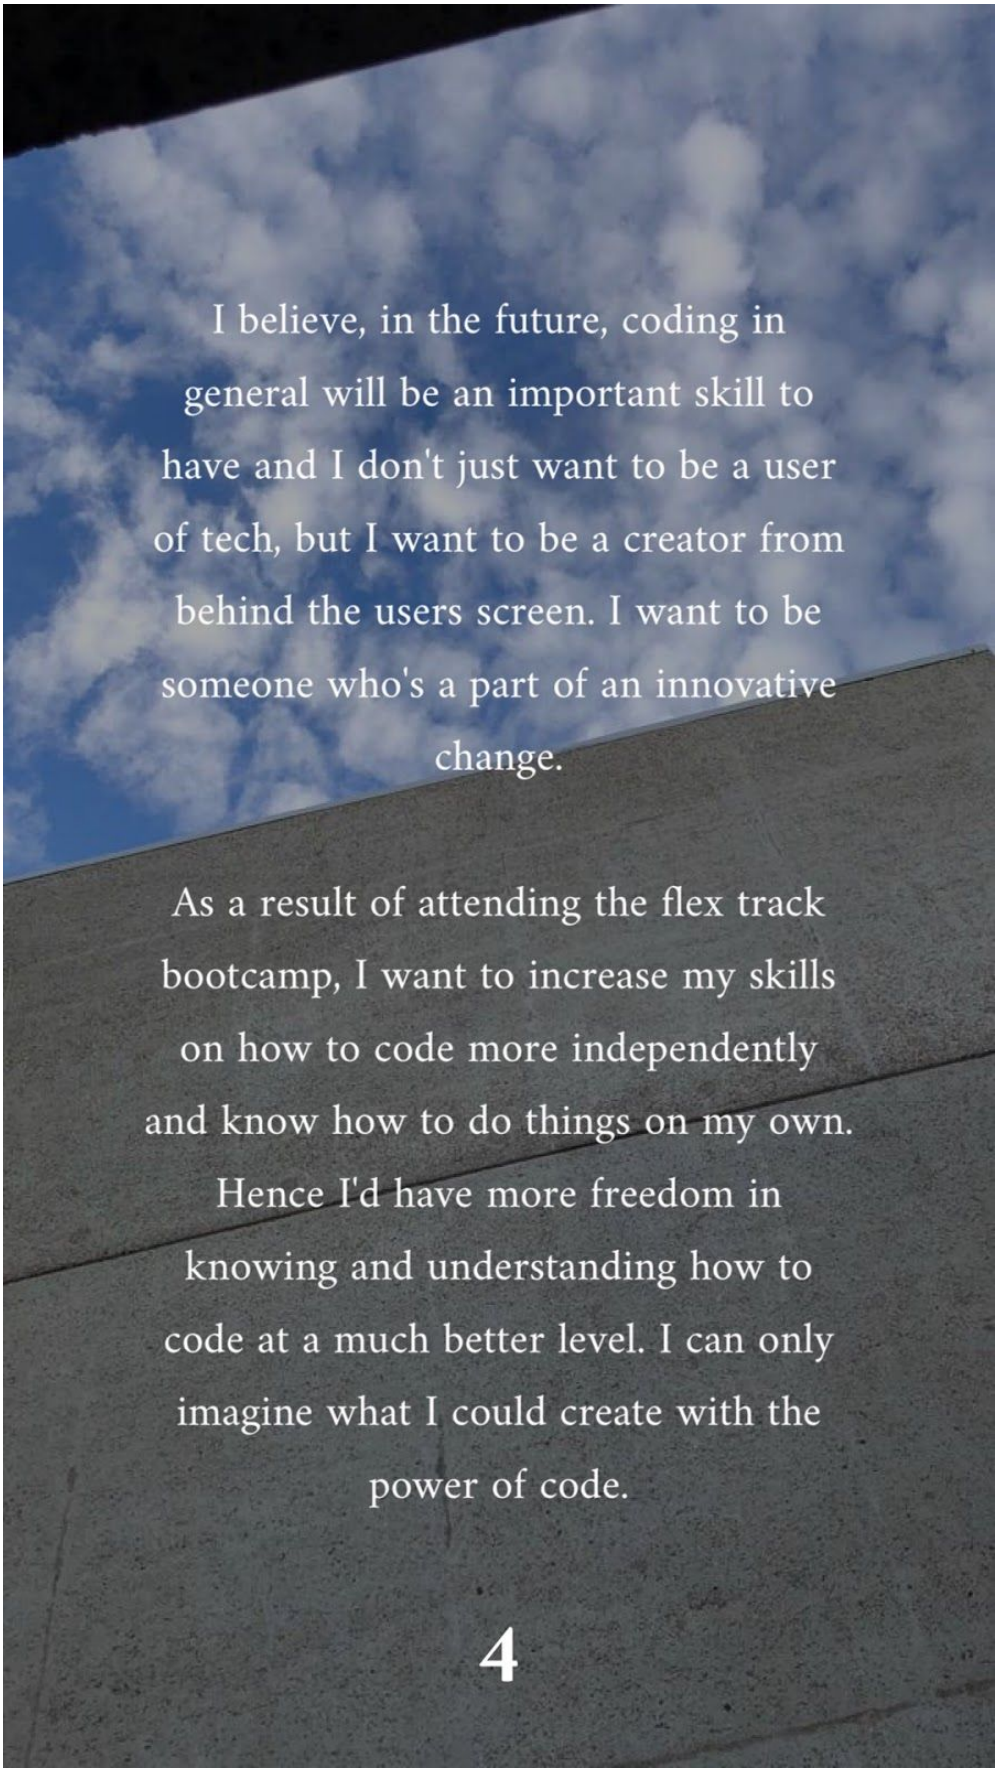
My story

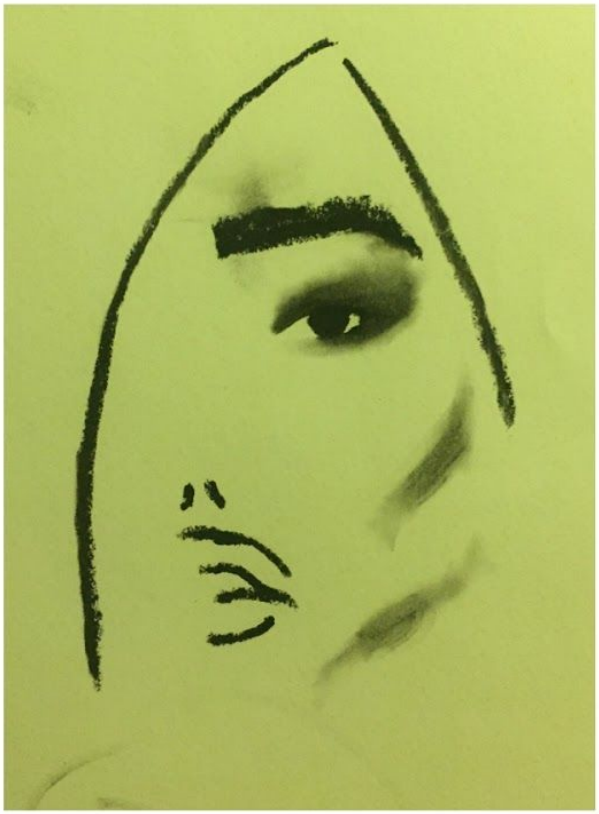
Growing up as a child I had a passion for creating. I was naturally more quiet and introverted and I expressed myself through my art and music. My passion for creativity continued to grow over the years and evolved into its own unique expressions. Instinctively I thought I wanted to be an artist, a poet, a musician or something that involved creating but I could never think of a job where I would bring all my creative talents together. I knew that I wanted to also work in an industry that's always changing and improving the lives of many.

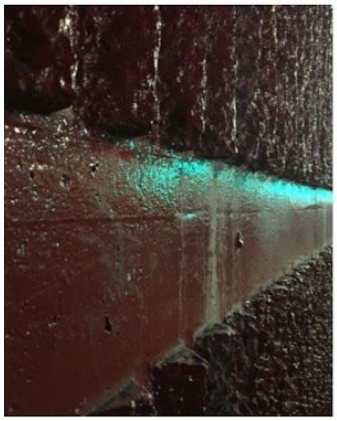


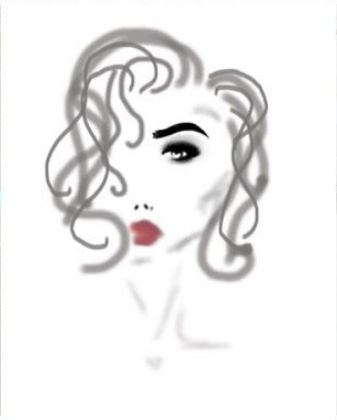
I was introduced to the world of tech through my brother. What I liked about it was how in tech there is a balance of being creative and logical, as well as also learning new things within any project. I think it is important to always continue growing and exploring in life and merging my creativity with code would take me to a new and different level.

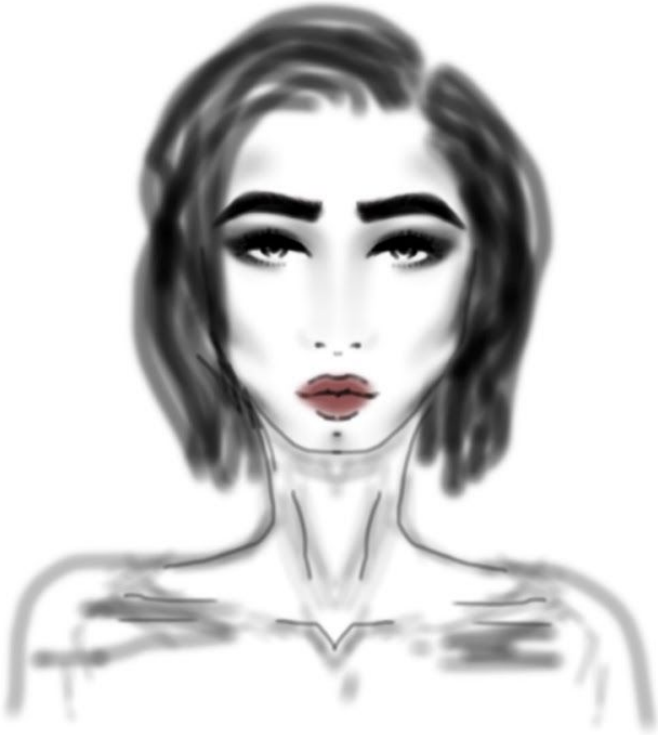
I think code carries a great deal of involvement in today's society and I believe it'll continue growing drastically. As seen with covid, technology was crucial and without it, it'd be impossible to get through the whole pandemic.

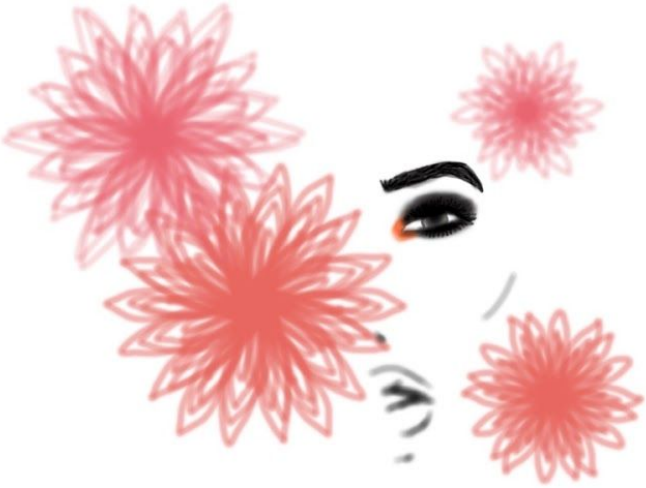


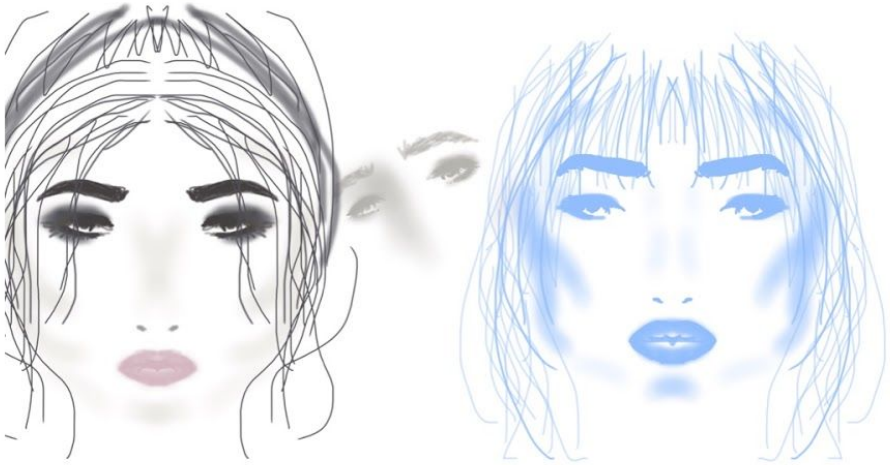
I believe, in the future, coding in general will be an important skill to have and I don't just want to be a user of tech, but I want to be a creator from behind the users screen. I want to be someone who's a part of an innovative change.


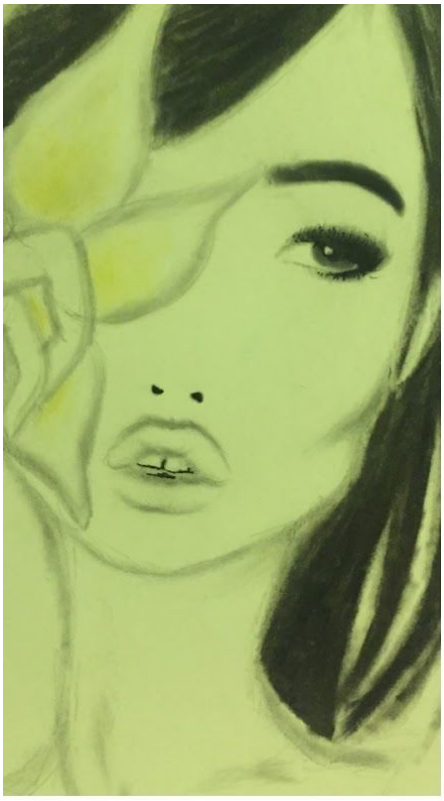


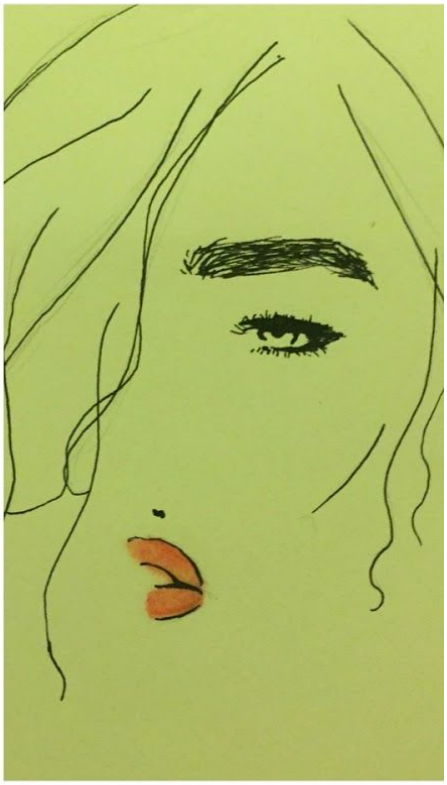


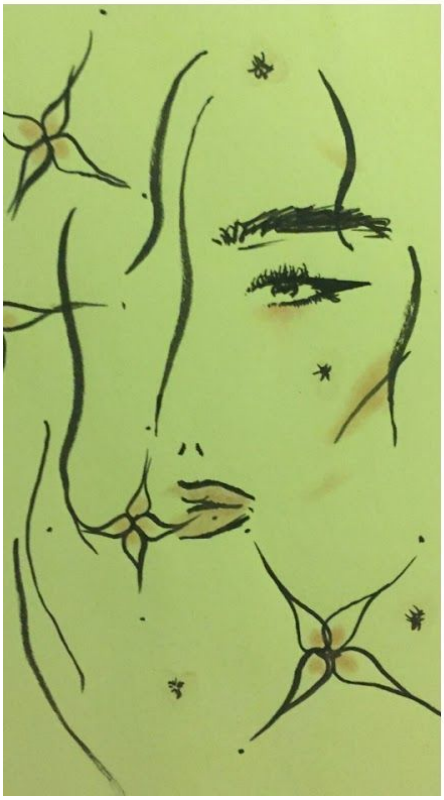












As a result of attending the flex track bootcamp, I want to increase my skills on how to code more independently and know how to do things on my own. Hence I'd have more freedom in knowing and understanding how to code at a much better level. I can only imagine what I could create with the power of code.
